Animal Feet

Reptiles, mammals, amphibians, birds, and insects have a variety of different kinds of feet. Some feet are built primarily for movement. A mountain goat has cloven hooves, so it can scale cliffs that are practically vertical! Mosquitoes have dense scales on their feet that help them land on water to lay eggs. The chimpanzee has feet that help it grasp and climb trees. Gecko feet have tiny hairs that help them stick to walls and ceilings.

Some animals have feet that do more than to help them move. These feet serve different functions. The elephant, for example, has sensitive nerve endings in its feet to "hear" sound waves. The male platypus has webbed feet for swimming with spurs full of venom for fighting! The ostrich also uses its feet for defense and has a lethal kick. Eagles use their talons for hunting.

1. Which one is the main idea for the first paragraph? *

INVENTIONS

Human creativity can be amazing! This ingenuity can be seen in many inventions that have been created throughout history. For example, the thermometer was invented in 1714 by Gabriel Fahrenheit. Samuel Morse invented the telegraph in 1830 as a way to communicate over long distances. Sarah Mather invented the submarine lamp and telescope in 1845. In 1966, Marie Van Brittan Brown invented the first home security system. In 2012, teenager Deepika Kurup built a way to clean water using solar energy.

History is also filled with inventors who took previously created items and improved upon those inventions. Their creativity should also be commended. One example is Galileo, who improved upon the telescope in 1609. Elisha Otis took an Egyptian invention, the elevator, and made it much safer in 1853. Maria Beasley improved the life raft in 1882, making it fireproof and foldable with guard rails.
