The Lion's Whisker

Ethiopian Folktale

Long ago, a little boy lived happily with his mother and father in their home. Unfortunately, the mother died, leaving the little boy sad and angry. Years passed and the father decided to remarry. The stepmother tried to hug the little boy, fix his favorite foods, and play with him, but the son ignored her.

One day, the stepmother walked to the middle of the forest to see the medicine man. He promised to fix a potion for her if she brought him a lion's whisker. The next day, the stepmother had an idea. She made a delicious meat stew and placed it in front of the lion's cave. Day after day she did this until the lion started sitting in front of the cave waiting for her. Eventually, the lion began to trust her, and when she asked for one of his whiskers, he gave it to her.

The woman ran to the medicine man's home. When she got there, he told her that he had no potion for her, but if she was as patient with the son as she was with the lion, he would grow to accept and to love her. And that is exactly what happened.

SAPANA AND THE BIRDS OF PREY

Arapaho (Native American) Folktale

Sapana loved birds of prey and was angry with a porcupine who threw his quills at them. When Sapana saw the porcupine, she chased him up a tree, through the clouds, and into the Sky World. The porcupine changed himself into an old man, but when Sapana wanted to leave, he aimed his giant quills at her, so she stayed. The old man made Sapana work all day, scraping buffalo hides and turning them into robes. Sometimes, he made her pick wild turnips for dinner. One day Sapana found a huge turnip and pulled until it popped out of the ground, leaving a hole in the sky. Looking down, she saw Earth below. She put the turnip back over the hole and planned her escape.

Sapana took leftover strips from buffalo hides and braided them into a long rope. She lowered herself through the turnip hole with the rope tied to her waist. Down through the clouds she went, but the rope was too short. Just then, the old man started swinging the rope, and then he cut the rope too. Sapana tumbled towards the Earth, but a buzzard caught her on his back and carried her a few minutes until he was too tired. An eagle took over, and then a hawk helped too. All the birds cared for her and gently brought her back home. Since that day, the people of her village always leave an extra buffalo on the field for the birds of the sky.
